

NOBODY'S SECRET THE PICKLE TRUST.

Its Formation a Sweet Boon to Mankind in General.

FOE TO DEATH RATE.

Paper Mache Substitute for the Real Green Article Will Save Many Lives.

The news that a pickle trust has been formed and that the price of preserved vegetables is to be raised to a prohibitive figure, while causing great consternation in New England and Canada, where people eat pickles for breakfast, dinner and supper and sometimes get up in the middle of the night to eat more, has not alarmed New York.

In this city the consumption of pickles is small, comparatively. They are placed upon saucers on restaurant tables, but persons never eat them. The restaurant keepers might just as well supply pickles made of wax or asbestos, as the only purpose they serve is that of ornament.

The pickles that are consumed in quantities in this city generally are imported. The price of these, it is believed, will not be affected by the pickle trust. In English chop houses it is customary to serve to customers a large jar of pickles floating in watery mustard. This is a laudable practice, it is understood, will be continued.

There are pickle shippers in the neighborhood of Warren, on the North River who send out dwarf cucumbers immersed in brine to any one reckless enough to eat them. The hearts of these men are beating a little faster at the news that a pickle trust has been organized.

"We send most of our pickles to the West," said a commission man "they are eaten largely in St. Louis. In that town the waiter brings to a customer a green pickle or cucumber, every piece of which is eaten. Many an oyster house patron will be delighted at the thought that he may get a pickle with his oyster. He will put a stop to this custom. Some men while waiting for their oysters have not enough strength of mind to resist the fatal pickle, although they know very well that it will give indigestion to them. Gradually they find their hands stealing involuntarily toward the deadly green thing, which they transfer to their mouths."

"I believe I never should have had dyspepsia," said a person with a pained look, "only for those dead-end cucumbers. They must have been invented by some man with an evil mind. They are utterly unfit to eat, except, so to speak, as a medicine. If the pickle trust only drives them away it will be doing the only good thing that can be done."

In Connecticut towns when the "extras" arrived telling about the pickle trust the universal cry was, "What a waste of time!" "What on earth shall we have for breakfast after this?"

THESE PAUPERS FEEL HEALTHY.

Destitute Immigrants Come Over First Class to Avoid Exclusion.

A report was made recently by the Immigration Commissioners to the effect that the pauper labor of Europe, in order to avoid the strict examination at this port and possible exclusion because of lack of money, is coming over the Atlantic as a saloon passenger. Those in the first cabin do not have to show the contents of their pockets to stern men with microscopes and prove to their satisfaction that they will not become public charges, and the paupers take advantage of that custom.

The Government assumes that if a man has enough money to pay a saloon passage he is not likely to turn up later and ask for admission to the country. The Immigration Commissioners, are arriving in New York disguised as persons of wealth and influence. The Commissioners intimate that authority should be given them to overhaul the assets of saloon passengers and exclude them if they have not the $20 per capita that the law requires.

There are saloon passengers in the Commissioners' report that probably did not strike the members as humorous. The spectacle of the pauper labor of Europe in the first class stateroom of an ocean liner, in order to avoid the indignity and fool the authorities might bring a smile to the mouth of the casual observer. The report does not say so, but it is assumed that the crafty paupers have other methods of deceiving the porters and such as counting over in their own steam wigs.

But the really serious part of the report consists in the proposition that saloon passengers shall be searched, and only those who have $20 shall be admitted into the country. This is a very American returning from Europe. The paupers of Europe who are conversant with the habits of the tourists are greatly alarmed at the notion of being searched. They think $20 limit to the "first-class." They say that if the rule were applied it might mean some time in the United States. They would like to see the United States. They would like to see the United States. They would like to see the United States.

"The poverty of returning tourists is alarming," said a purser. "Some of them haven't even a cent when they leave the ship. I have often wondered why some men don't establish pawnshops on the pier."

"Any purser will tell you of the destitute state in which American millionaires are when they land. About the day before we get into port they come into my cabin and mysteriously close the door. Then, in a manufactured way, they whisper to me the fact that they are penniless. They always appear to think there is danger of my putting them in iron as lunatics. Often I have longed to take all my salary and the cash assets of the ship and then have to borrow from the other officers."

"When I don't know a man I sometimes hold his baggage as security. The purser, like the hotel keeper, accumulates a large sum of money. He is a very rich man. He is a very rich man. He is a very rich man."

The Immigration officials complain very loudly of the tactics of the paupers. "How can you beat those fellows?" asked one. "In order to hoodwink us they cover themselves with diamonds and flash large rolls of bills around, some of which I suspect may be stage money."

Five Arrogant 400 Hotel Guests. Four hundred guests of the Cosmopolitan Hotel, at West Broadway and Chambers street, were frightened out of their rooms at 5:15 o'clock yesterday morning by a fire next door to them. Many women were in the hotel, but the police, 2d Precinct, and the cooler guests of the hotel helped quiet the most excited persons, and nobody was hurt. The fire, which burned out the inside of 100, 102 and 104 West Broadway, was extinguished.

BLOCKS OF ORE IN UNIQUE IRON MINE

Are Rectangular and Cemented Together Like Bricks in a Wall.

THREE MILES OF THEM.

Property of the Whitney Syndicate on Bell Island, Newfoundland.

There is no other such mine in the world as the iron mine on Bell Island, Newfoundland. It is unique in many particulars. The company working it is known as the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, at the head of which is H. M. Whitney, of Boston.

This new company, formed by the amalgamation of the Ferris Steel Company, of New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, and the Cape Breton Coal Company, controls a vast field of hematite ore, besides all the coal mines of Cape Breton and the limestone quarries of Sydney.

Iron was discovered on Bell Island in 1815. It was 1892, however, before it was recognized to have a working commercial value. In 1893 the tract was sold for $120,000. When the Whitney syndicate purchased it last Spring the cost was $1,000,000. The capital of the Whitney company is $2,000,000. Two thousand five hundred tons of ore a day is the present output, but an output of 150,000 tons a month is being provided for, besides the conversion of this mass into steel and iron, ready for shipment.

In Rectangular Blocks. The advance sheets of Consular Reports of September 20 says of this mine: "It is an open bed or deposit of iron ore, 300 feet wide and some three miles long, and all the labor required is to blast it with dynamite and shovel it into cars. It is made up of innumerable rectangular blocks of ore, set together in almost horizontal strata, like bricks in a wall or tiles in a pavement, and cemented into a solid mass by some gigantic pressure exerted countless ages ago."

With the deposit of soil, which is only ten feet deep, is removed, "the horizontal face of the section resembles nothing so much as a level tiled floor, the lines of the rectangular blocks composing it being distinctly visible. A lateral view of the section shows the different strata piled on top of each other with mathematical precision."

The method of getting out this ore is simple but interesting. Iron drills work holes downward into this floor, dynamite cartridges are embedded in them and exploded by electricity. When the shock comes the mass is smashed into a host of component cubes or blocks.

Mined for 25 Cents a Ton. The ore available now is estimated at 35,000,000 tons, while the average cost of mining it has been but 25 cents a ton up to this point. By virtue of the gravity system the ore is carried for one-fifth of a cent a ton from a great reservoir on the cliff into the hold of the waiting steamer.

In addition to these natural advantages $2 a ton is allowed by the Government for iron smelted in Canada, and $5 dollars a ton on steel. Furnaces and ovens to the value of $3,000,000 are now building. The total expenditure on equipment, President Whitney says will be about $8,000,000. The plant will be entirely finished in about three years.

Ultimately the company will build great steel steamships and supply steel for the largest structural operations. The remaining $1,000,000 of the capital will be used for this purpose.

THREE MEN STABBED IN QUARREL ABOUT CHILDREN.

Little Ones Had a Dispute First About Two Pennies, Causing a Family Feud.

A quarrel about two cents between two children led to the stabbing yesterday of Joseph Marschak and his sons, Joseph, Jr., and Jacob, at their home, No. 82 Monroe street, by Isaac Dub, who fought the Marschaks, aided by his brother Victor. The Dubbs, with Louis Garbick, Max Fleischer and Charles Krinner, who board with them, were arrested. The wounds of the Marschaks are not dangerous.

The nine-year-old son of Joseph Marschak, Jr., lent two pennies to the five-year-old son of Isaac Dub on Thursday, and he demanded the return of them later in the day. The boy would not return the money and this led to a family feud.

Joseph Marschak, Sr., was attacked by the Dubbs. He about in that the same to his aid. Chairs and dishes were used as weapons, and a stove was overturned in the fight. Isaac ended the fighting by getting a carving knife and stabbing the Marschaks.

An ambulance was summoned from Governor Hospital and the injured men were taken there.

FELL AND BROKE HIS NECK
AT FIREWORKS DISPLAY.

Robert Morgan, sixty years old, who lived in a shanty at the Boulevard and Twelfth avenue, with his wife and two sons, was found dead with a broken neck yesterday morning in the area of the Hudson River Reef Company, at One Hundred and Thirty-second street and the North River.

The area is about eight feet deep and on the bottom is an iron railing. Some boys saw the body lying at the bottom of the area this morning and reported to the police. It is supposed that Morgan stood or sat on the railing last night to see the fireworks and lost his balance.

Christening of a Big Whiskey Vat. An interesting ceremony occurred a few days ago in the basement of the House of Commons of England. A two years' supply of whiskey had been placed there, and the vessel containing it, called the Valentina vat, was christened in the presence of all the members of the House, except the teetotalers, who are in the minority. The curious thing is that the vat, which was christened by an Irish M. P. and named after an Irish peer, contains Scotch whiskey. The Irish members say that this does not sound well for Home Rule.

WAITED DOOMSDAY WITH GREAT ANXIETY

A Millennium Scare in an English Town Caused Much Excitement.

London, Sept. 30.—The little district of Winton, outside Bournemouth, has just passed through a period of unrestrained excitement. It expected the millennium to begin last Saturday, and for some reason, which is quite inexplicable, seeing the good people are to be taken away from all the millennium troubles, awaited the fateful day "with much anxiety and consternation."

But the millennium has not been punctual, and now we have the local newspapers which under other circumstances would have been chronicling startling millennium proceedings, calmly ascribing the doings of the good people simply to unreasoning superstition.

According to these the rumor originated with the Christadelphians, a number of whom saw "a red star in the heavens." This was taken as a sign of the approach of the millennium, and the sect prepared to cease all business and set out for Jerusalem.

It is even hinted that one of the prominent leaders of the body did not await the coming of Saturday, but at once departed, wearing a brand new outfit for the occasion, and mounted on a black horse.

In another case a tradesman is said to have refused an order for food for the Sunday, giving as his reason that by that day there would be no necessity for eating, as the millennium would have already set in.

However, a week has elapsed and nothing has happened. There is a blithesome where.

HOW TO BE FAT AND ROSY.

Blood makes you rosy. Fat makes you strong. The same food, properly digested, is the cause of both.

If you are thin, pale, haggard and miserable, it is either because you are not eating the right food or the food you are eating is not doing you good. The remedy in both cases is Loring's Cornflour Food.

How to be fat and rosy is simply a question of food. The better the food the rosier and plumper you will be.

All the world knows that the starch foods are the fattening foods. But only a few people understand that the reason some people obstinately remain thin, pale and weak is because the food they eat is being WASTED.

MARY BECK HAPPY AT CHEATING DEATH.

She Rode Over a Steep Precipice on Her Bicycle.

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 30.—Miss Mary Beck, of this city, is recovering from her fall over the East Rock precipice. When half way down the side of the rock, as she was tossed from crag to crag, her hand caught a shrub growing out of the rock and she was saved.

"I firmly thought that my end had come," said Miss Beck to-night. "When my bicycle struck a rock I was tossed like a rubber ball over the stone fence which guards the side of the rock. I had no time to think of clutching a support. As the force of the toss raised me above the stone wall and I looked over I saw only a sheer descent of two hundred feet in front of me."

"I can't remember anything more. I lost consciousness, I think, for it was all a blank until I found myself dangling in mid-air, holding to the little shrub for dear life. Charlie Thompson, the young man who was with me, says he saw me grope wildly as I shot down the side of the rock, but I remember nothing of it. But it seemed an age from the time I went over the side of the wall till I stopped moving, with my hands firmly grasping the crag."

"Mr. Thompson, with other assistance, succeeded in raising me to the top of the rock, and, jumping into a carriage, carried me to a doctor's. I did not think of myself as bruised or injured, but when the doctor held a mirror in front of me I nearly fainted. I looked a fright. My face was gashed with cuts which ran in every direction, and I looked worse than any Indian who ever donned his war paint."

"But I broke no bones, and so the cuts and bruises on my face, hands and body do not make much difference. It was only one chance of a hundred to take in saving myself, and I was lucky enough to take it."

Miss Beck still is prostrated by her experience. Her face is a network of patches of court plaster and stitches, which tell the story of her wounds and their cure by the surgeon. She is twenty years old and is a pretty blonde. She lives with her parents and is prominent in New Haven society. She is an expert wheelwoman.

Her companion, Mr. Thompson, denies that she lost control of her wheel. "She is too good a wheelwoman for that," said he. "Her wheel struck an obstruction in the path and she dashed her over the stone wall. She plunged head foremost down the side of the cliff, and I never expected to see her alive again."
